of the former would be Shins and those of the latter would be Yeshkuns. This shows that their family system takes the mother into consideration.

The Ronos are said to have come from Rajauri, a district in Kashmir, where they belonged to a ruling family of the district.

The Gujars have recently come to these parts and speak the same dialect as in India.

Besides these, there is another family of the former Muhammadan rulers of the country called "Ra." They originally came from Skardu about three centuries ago, and professed to be the descendants of Alexander the Great. The inhabitants considered them to have been born of a fairy, and this idea leads the people to think that their rulers were of a superior race touching on the divine, and that therefore it was necessary to honour and obey them.

The people live very simply, and their requirements are few. Each one is himself a cultivator, a weaver, a carpenter, etc. Their dress, which they weave from the wool of sheep and ibex, includes the shuka (cloak), woollen pantaloons, a woollen shirt and a rolled cap. The women wear loose trousers, a shirt and a cap, with a few silver ornaments and shell brooches. They wear on their feet a kind of leather socks called pukkus, made either of ibex skin or of cow hide. For hill journeys they wrap their feet in pieces of goat or ibex skin which they call thawli.

The chief amusement of the people is polo, which they play with the utmost zest, and shooting markhor, ibex and oorial with their matchlocks for the sake of meat, skin and wool.

The former language of the people was Sanskrit, but the dialect now spoken is generally called "Shina," though the Chitralis call it "Dangrik." It contains many Sanskrit as well as Persian words.

Such are the tribes to whom the folklore and customs appertain, but they have lived together for such a long period under the Buddhist and Muhammadan rulers that it is now difficult to know which of the ceremonies was originally observed by each separate tribe.

THE FESTIVAL OF "SHINO BASONO."

The advent of spring in the Gilgit country brings with it the quaint festival of "Shino Basono," which corresponds to the English May-day. It lasts about fifteen days, beginning in the middle of February and ending about the beginning of March. As indicating that the long cold winter is at an end with all its accompanying hardships, and that spring is nigh, bringing with it warmth and life and a renewal of the scanty stock of provisions which has run dangerously low during the past months, the festival is hailed with much rejoicing by the simple Gilgit folk. In order to observe this feast rightly, the people, twelve days before its commencement, put ten seers of wheat into a wooden basin. They fill this up with water and keep the mixture wet for five days, after which they take it out and place it in a small pit dug for the purpose in the ground, over which stones are heaped. The wheat is left in this pit for four days, after which the grain is seen separate community. Like the Gawaré, their language is founded on Sanscrit.[1] They are treated with much respect by their neighbours, and occupy, as a rule, the best land in the country. A few of them are found also in Jalkot and in Palus on the same bank of the river. In addition to the above, a dialect of Shina is spoken by the greater number of the people of Koli, who belong to the Shin race. 563 [197]

The people of Palus, who are also Shins, inhabit a valley of considerable extent, stretching in a south-easterly direction, and having easy communication from its head with the Alai valley. Land in Palus is plentiful, and much remains uncultivated. As has been already observed, this abundance has for some time caused the envy of the more crowded populations of Alai and Koli. The population of Palus is much scattered, and embraces the inhabitants of all the valleys on the left bank of the Indus up to the Shorai nullah, where the boundary is marked by a solitary olive tree, which is the subject of a local legend. The principal village is Jalkot, 400 houses, which was formerly jointly tributary to Koli and Palus, and has now become a bone of contention between the two communities. Palus with its allies can muster about 5,000 fighting men. 162 361

Nearly opposite to Palus, on the right bank of the Indus, is the settlement of Puttun, which, with the group of villages in adjoining valleys dependent on it, can muster from 4,000 to 5,000 fighting men. Puttun is the largest and most flourishing place in the Kohistan. The land is noted for fertility, and the crops raised from it are of great richness. Here, again, a too redundant population has caused difficulties about land, and has forced a portion to seek a living by trade. The valleys of Chilas, Darel, and Tangir are frequented by pedlers from Puttun, to whom this portion of the local trade has been abandoned by the Koli people. 361 438

A few miles above Puttun, on the right bank, is the little settlement of Seo. This, with its outlying villages, the principal of which is Mandraza, can muster 400 fighting men. 361

Above Seo, on the same side, is the extensive valley of Kandia, running due west and then bending suddenly to the north. From the upper part of the valley, roads lead into Doobeyr, Bushkar, and Tangir. The population being widely scattered, this valley can only furnish some 1,500 fighting men, and the villages in it are small. The people are extremely poor, and the valley very inaccessible, the road from the 361 511

Up to this point in the Kohistan, the people along the 101 right bank of the river—that is to say, those of Bunker, Doo-
197 beyr, Puttun, Seo, and Kandia—speak a separate language[1] and call themselves Maiyon. The Afghans apply the name 186 of Mair to them. Very little is known of these people, who are the poorest of all the Kohistan communities. They combine against all others, and refuse to intermarry with any but their own people and those of Puttun and Jijál, who have, of late years only, begun to intermarry with the inhabitants of Koli and Palus. They apply the name of Dard to the people living on the left bank of the river. This is the only use of this term found among all the tribes to which it has been applied. Above Kandia, on both banks of the river, and in the lateral valleys up to and beyond Boonji, Shina[2] is the only language spoken.

361 Following up the course of the river, on the left bank, the 186 small communities of Sazin and Herbund are reached. They can respectively furnish about 400 and 500 fighting men. Between the two is the small valley of Shatial, which belongs to Sazin. The people of Sazin keep themselves apart from all others and refuse to intermarry. They have the reputation of being warlike and brave.

563 Immediately opposite Sazin, on the right bank, is the fertile valley of Tangir. The people, like those of Sazin and Herbund, are Shins intermixed with Yeshkuns and Krammins. They are looked upon as the rightful owners of the soil, but the fertility and abundance of the land has attracted Afghans from Swat of the Mundi Khel, Akhoond Khel, and Khuddoo Khel, and Syuds, who have begun to settle in the valley. Of late years, too, the overflow from the redundant populations of Koli and Palus has found its way into Tangir, so that now the immigrants outnumber the rightful owners of the soil. A bad feeling also exists between Tangir and Sazin on the 361 same account. The valley can muster about 1,200 fighting
162 men, of whom only one-third are furnished by the three villages of Kami, Shekho, and Diemar, the only villages in which none of the recent immigrants are found. The principal village in the valley is Kami (fort), 250 houses; after 487 this, the fortified villages of Juglot, Loork, and Diemar. From the head of the valley, which is thickly covered with pine forest, two roads lead into the Yassin territory, besides the 563 will no doubt before long be eliminated. Greatly as they dislike the Afghans, their hostility seldom rises to active opposition, their usual attitude being one of passive resistance. The Afghan, on his part, penetrates fearlessly into the Kohistan for purposes of trade, disregarding black looks and cold welcome so long as he can discern a profit to be made. Many of the villages have Pushtoo as well as local names.

241 The Torwal country is rich and fertile, yielding below Chodgram two crops of great abundance yearly. This would show that the elevation of Chodgram is about 7,000 feet. The 233 people own enormous flocks of sheep, goats, and cattle, yielding great quantities of butter, much of which finds its way into the Peshawur market by the hands of Afghan traders. Iron also is found in Torwal.

779 The Torwalik have been too long converted to Islam and exposed to the preaching of Swat Moollahs to have retained 535 any customs connected with other religions. Like most of the other Dard tribes, they have retained their national dances.

162 Bushkar is the name given to the community which 361 inhabit the upper part of the Punjkorah Valley, whence they have overflowed into the upper part of the Swat Valley,
101 and occupied the three large villages of Otrote, Ushoo, and Kalam. They live on good terms with their Torwal neighbours, and number altogether from 12,000 to 15,000 souls. Their principal villages are Tull and Kalkot in the Punjkorah
• 511 Valley, containing respectively 1,500 families. They are the most degraded of all the Dard tribes, and, in spite of a fertile soil and abundant flocks and herds, live in great squalor.
578 Amongst themselves they are exceedingly quarrelsome, and are adepts in the use of the sling, by means of which they hurl
651 stones with great force and precision. Exposed as they are to raids from every side, they seem unable to offer any resistance; and, notwithstanding a payment of yearly tribute, they are subjected to frequent attacks for the sake of wringing additional payments from them. The three villages in the Swat Valley pay tribute to Yassin, and the three northernmost villages in the Punjkorah Valley pay a double tribute to Yassin and Chitral. Birkot, Biar, and Rashkot pay a double tribute to Chitral and Dir, and the five Bushkar villages below Rashkot pay tribute solely to Dir. Rashkot is better 563 known under its Pushtoo name of Patrak. There is also
197 a large Goojur population, which pays tribute to Dir. In recent years a considerable migration of Kho has taken place

181 They are unenterprising wanting in stamina and in perseverance. They are men of fine enough physique, but they are soft, and have little or no warlike instinct.

● [511] Very much attached to their lands, they will not move except under official pressure or the compulsion of the direst poverty. Half a dozen able-bodied men of one family prefer starving on a tiny piece of ancestral land to dividing their forces and taking up ample grants, distant perhaps but a few miles from [661] their old home. The systematic oppression of their rulers, which deprived a man of much of the fruit of his labours, accounts in part for their attitude on this particular point, but, allowing for this, the race is sadly wanting in initiative. The Yeshkun is, I am inclined to think, a better man than the Shin, there is no doubt about his being a better fighting man, and the small caste or clan of the Ronu is the best of all.

[795] Taking the whole of Dardistan the inhabitants are not warlike, and in the southern portion alone, which is under the religious influence of the Mullahs of Swat, do you find fanaticism. The people are peaceful; there is none of the natural devilry, dash, love of war, and enterprise, which you find in the neighbouring Pathan, and they never have stood up, and never would stand up, against severe losses.

726 But that they could fight behind suitable defences I always felt was pretty certain, and we found this at Nilt. Centuries of desultory warfare have made them adepts at the art of field fortification, and awkward customers to deal with when on the defensive. In attack they are contemptible, and only dangerous when overwhelming numbers force disciplined troops on to the defensive, as at Chitral.
